

Every setting is executed four times on one seed, switching each source of alarm off in turn

$$\text{interaction} = \text{Both} - \text{Claims-making only} - \text{Othering only} + \text{Neither}$$

A single seed fixes the network, the initial positions, the initial alarm and the thresholds, so the four worlds are the same population and no other difference between them is possible.